We're in the age of always-on technology where people spend a lot of time sitting at a computer. As a result, it's becoming increasingly common to suffer from eyestrain, especially if you're using a computer screen for a long period of time. This is especially true when you're trying to work while being on a plane, train, or even at your desk. However, simply turning up the brightness of your monitor and moving your eyes around may not be enough, since it's not recommended to stare at the screen for a prolonged period of time, especially if it's for a long duration. In this case, the good news is that BeforeDo HealthWorker can be of help, since it has a bunch of display settings and features that can help you reduce eyestrain and other problems related to prolonged computer usage. BeforeDo HealthWorker will do a quick check of your computer's display settings and can even set the monitor to a higher brightness level, which is not recommended if you're using a dark-colored screen. However, this tool doesn't modify your computer's display settings, so you're free to customize everything to your own needs and preferences. You can set your screen resolution and turn on/off different display features, such as the status of your screen saver, the way your display shows different elements, or if you want to use a toner mode. BeforeDo HealthWorker can also remind you to take a break every 30 minutes, so you can take some long-needed rest and refresh yourself. In addition, you can set the way you want to be reminded to take breaks: Just tap the timer button, which has a plus-minus button on it, to see the time you have left before your break starts. NOTE: If you want to turn this function off, simply tap the pencil button on the timer. BeforeDo HealthWorker also has a health function that will remind you to take a break every 30 minutes, so you don't have to rely on the timer. The only difference between the timer and the health function is that the health function will pause the reminder if you leave the application open. However, you can still set up the reminders manually. To do this, simply open the main menu, tap the "Health" option, and then choose the desired "Setting" option. You can define
