I'm developing a web application where I need a simple log that will record events in a database. So far I have been using System.out.println and since they are really in streams, they stop the current thread. I know that System.out has a method called flush(), but the purpose is to perform a flushing of the text, and this is done at the end of the processing of the current thread. I want something like: private static final Log log = Log.getLog(); log.info("Log info message"); What I want to be done with the log message is to be done as soon as possible, and therefore, the log should not block the thread. A: Depending on what you want to do
