You have to upload your MSI and let them do the work. It's a fully automated process without extra effort. I highly recommend it! Q: Excel VBA: How to compare two list and find the corresponding value? I have a list of ids in this format {12345, 67890, 12346, 76589} and I have a list of date, e.g. {1/1/2018, 1/2/2018, 1/3/2018, 1/4/2018} (I have a whole year's data). Now I want to find out which record on the list has a corresponding value on the other list, e.g. 12345 in the first list has a 1/1/2018 record on the second list, and so on. I have tried to use the LEN function but it doesn't give me the result I want. I can only match the first number, no matter how many numbers there are in the id. Can someone help me out with this? A: If you want to match by each row of each of the lists: =IFERROR(INDEX(ID_list,MATCH(A2,D2:D)),") If you want to match by the first number of each row of each list: =IFERROR(INDEX(ID_list,MATCH(A1,D1:D)), "") John F. Chambers John F. What's New in the?

ValidInstaller installs software without Microsoft Installer. Instead ValidInstaller uses your licensed keys to identify your computer and all attached devices. A: I'd personally suggest using a batch file to call the MSI (since it sounds like you're on a machine where you don't have MSI). I tend to use a batch file to launch the MSI with some parameters so I can see what's going on as it's happening. I also tend to write a little PowerShell script that is run from the command line. I haven't used the MSI Wizard for years. I prefer to write my own.bat files for things like creating shortcuts to applications, writing out per-user and per-machine registry changes, creating secure temporary folders, etc. You could certainly use the MSI Wizard for something like that. I tend to use an application called MSSMS (Microsoft SQL Server Management Studio) to look at databases, and it runs great from the command line. I can't say I've ever used the MSI Wizard for that. Then there's the mystery of what you're doing for the names of the MSI. I'm not sure what you mean by naming the MSI. I do think that InstallShield is a bit heavy-handed, because it requires some sort of header that includes the path to the installation program. The MSI files themselves don't include any path information, and the Windows Installer typically creates a "Software Installation Type: InstallShield MSI Package" which is invisible to most users. A: You can use the MSI Installer but if you do not have MSI Studio or you are not a big fan of using Microsoft

Installer. You can create a batch file that calls the MSI and pass the required parameters. Something like this can work. `msiexec.exe /i`

"C:\installers\myInstall.msi"

"C:\installers\log.txt" -lang "en-US"

The parameters are the Installation path, Title and language, which you can pass to the command line. Some additional documentation from MSDN: You could also use a small batch file to pass arguments to the MSI, or you can create a batch file and then launch the batch file from your shortcuts, which would be easier. [The role of echocardiography in the treatment of cardiovascular disease]. The major advantage of the echocardiographic examination is its availability and its ability to assess the systolic and diastolic function of the heart in different clinical settings. Its high sensitivity to assess structural lesions of the heart has to be used very carefully. The continuous increase in the number of studies of the kidney is due to the widespread availability of
